

Our work focuses on the simulation and understanding of precipitation occurring within a system where the fluid containing dissolved reactants is flowing. The effects which the flow has upon the growing structures is not well studied or understood. This is especially true of the turbulence generated by such growing structures and the mixing which it causes. The image presented shows the simulated vorticity field of a fluid generated by rough elements on the channel walls.